

Contents

- 197-198 Introduction to the Special Issue on Open Research Practices and Reproducibility in Expertise Research
Samuel T. McAbee¹ and Brooke N. Macnamara²
¹Department of Psychology, Bowling Green State University, USA
²Department of Psychological Sciences, Case Western Reserve University, USA
- 199-209 Truth and Transparency in Expertise Research
Rachel A. Searston¹, Matthew B. Thompson², Samuel G. Robson³,
Brooklyn J. Corbett³, Gianni Ribeiro³, Gary Edmond⁴, and Jason M. Tangen³
¹School of Psychology, University of Adelaide, Australia
²Discipline of Psychology, Murdoch University, Australia
³School of Psychology, University of Queensland, Australia
⁴School of Law, University of New South Wales, Australia
- 210-216 Preregistration in the Context of Expertise Research: Benefits, Challenges, and Recommendations
David Moreau
School of Psychology and Center for Brain Research, University of Auckland, New Zealand
- 217-223 Retiring Statistical Significance from Psychology and Expertise Research
Guillermo Campitelli
Discipline of Psychology, Murdoch University, Australia
- 224-242 Right-Tail Range Restriction: A Lurking Threat to Detecting Associations between Traits and Skill among Experts
Harrison J. Kell¹ and Jonathan Wai²
¹Academic to Career Research Center, Educational Testing Service, USA
²Department of Education Reform and Department of Psychology, University of Arkansas, USA

Journal of Expertise
2019. Vol. 2(4)
© 2019. The authors license this article under the terms of the Creative Commons
Attribution 3.0 License.
ISSN 2573-2773